Coloríginz organises Organic Day

Last month, we organised the Coloríginz Organic Day: an inspiring event where organic growers and market parties came together to share knowledge, insights and ambitions. What stood out most was the genuine interest and engagement of all participants. The energy in the room showed that organic is no longer a niche topic, but a shared movement that everyone actively wants to contribute to.

During the sessions, valuable insights were gained from both the wholesale and florist segment, as well as the supermarket segment. Open discussions took place about opportunities, challenges and what is concretely needed to further grow organic flowers structurally.

In the coming period, we will:

- Map organic production per grower
- Develop a clear weekly product calendar
- Engage with a select group of interested customers to better align supply and demand

The aim is to continue acting as a central link between growers and the market, enabling us to jointly build a broader and stronger organic assortment.

By Olga Keijser

Dutch Flower Group

Thanks to the joint efforts of procurement, sustainability teams and management, we made another significant step in 2025 towards our IMPACT2030 targets.

As DFG, we closed the year with 81% FSI-certified flowers and plants, a strong group result.

At the end of March, Royal FloraHolland reaffirmed its strategy, including additional support for growers and financial incentives for non-certified supply. This approach accelerates movement across the chain and aligns directly with our own strategy.

Our focus going forward:

- Further scaling of certified volumes across all companies
- Top 20 approach led by Sustainability Ambassadors for non-compliant growers
- Strengthening collaboration with FSI Accelerators Trade and supply chain partners
- Continued integration of FSI compliance into daily sourcing decisions

In addition, we see opportunities for further scaling within trading companies: FSI will soon approach a broader group of trading houses individually to join the FSI Accelerators Group. This supports the creation of a necessary level playing field, enabling the sector to move forward more evenly in line with the joint FSI roadmap, while further strengthening our relationship with growers.

For us, FSI remains an important instrument to guide our supply chain and to move step by step towards responsible cultivation.

By Linda van Waveren and Jonny Young