Wild Harvest on the path to certification

In January, Jonny Young (Human Rights Lead at DFG), together with Olga Keijser (Sustainability Manager at Coloríginz), travelled to Spain to visit one of our key exporters in the Wild Harvest pistachio supply chain.

The visit provided a valuable opportunity to engage directly with workers across the chain, from pickers and landowners to exporters, to gain better insight into the realities of wild harvesting and to assess the progress and impact of the FSI Wild Harvest Project.

It was clearly visible what positive impact Olga and the project team have had in building trust and creating strong, collaborative relationships with stakeholders across the supply chain. While challenges and risks remain, we are confident that the proposed standard will lead to meaningful improvements.

Looking ahead, the Wild Harvest Protocol will be included in the FSI Basket of Standards, under the management of FairWild. In 2026, FairWild aims to integrate and align the protocol with the existing certification framework and approach in Spain and South Africa, and to roll it out further to other countries such as Portugal, the US and Mexico in the coming years. This will contribute to robust assurance and long-term sustainability within the Wild Harvest supply chain.
